You are energetic in your pursuit of a wide range of interests. These interests are usually focused on social issues rather than personal pursuits. In fact, you are annoyingly aloof when it comes to personal relationships. It is difficult for you to share your inner life with someone else. That's because you are hardly aware of your own inner feelings. They are less interesting to you than what's going on out in the "real world". That's where the action is, and that's where you want to be! Your interest and dedication come to life when you can link up with some global cause. You thrive on the causes that promise to bring about the greatest social change. Chances are good that you are into energy, ecology, and the nuclear threat. Your involvements will not include antisocial behavior since you have a strong need to maintain the appearance of respectability. That goes hand in hand with your need for recognition of your natural leadership abilities. These leadership abilities are often recognized and rewarded soon after you have had the opportunity to prove them.

Your self-starting impulses often lead you into starting more than you can handle. That's a price you are willing to pay in your efforts to become master of your own destiny.

You willingly accept, and often seek out, the advice and opinions of others in matters affecting your own life. Not that you can't decide these things for yourself. It's just that your own happiness depends on meeting the needs and wishes of others in your life who you care about. It isn't important to you that you choose your own path. This need for approval makes you vulnerable to a few who might see it as an opportunity for taking advantage of your need to please them. Fortunately, experience teaches you how to protect yourself from such abuse. More often, your cooperative nature brings you the well-earned rewards of success in both personal and business relationships.

Too often you take on the moods and feelings of those around you, leading to confusion and feelings of insecurity. For your own sense of purpose in life, you have to guard against developing a dependence on others. You spend too much time remembering the past. That's because you want to ignore the stressful present and the fearful future. You are always on the lookout for opportunities to use your active imagination. You love to design party settings, or decorate your home. You would thrive in a job where you had to create a new ad campaign, design a store window or a landscape, or help in restoring a colonial village.
